Headteacher update:

Learning and behaviour across the school has felt particularly purposeful and calm this week. Children have now really bedded into to new classes and seem to have blossomed in a variety of ways; from new creative games in the playground, widening of friendship groups, to confidence to take on new challenges in the classroom.

At the end of week 4, we are now closer to the end of term than the beginning, so are talking about Christmas plans in earnest. The office will send out a separate communication of dates for the final 3 weeks which have some amendments to our original plans. We have worked hard to balance safety, a sense of calm with the important opportunities to hold some important and memorable events to which we can involve families. We're really looking forward to sharing more of our celebrations with you this year. Class 7 showed their caring sides and became engrossed in all things hedgehog when William shared news of the rescue hogs they were caring for.

Curriculum Update: Writing

The use of texts to inspire children's literacy and capitalising on the power of stories is what underpins our writing curriculum. Through the use of quality texts, we have been able to expand children's vocabulary, capture their imaginations and inspire them to create ambitious writing. This week, monitoring of writing across the school confirmed that children are making good use of their phonics knowledge which is enabling them to make independent attempts to use this ambitious vocabulary in their writing. The children talked about their enjoyment of writing both at school and at home. Most importantly they feel proud of their writing and see themselves as authors.

To find out more about how we teach writing see the writing page on our website.

so please make sure children have enough layers to keep them comfortable. PE and playtimes require extended periods outside, so warm coats are a necessity. As these layers are taken on and off regularly we are amassing a lot of lost property. Please name each item.
